

INTERNAL · NEWSLETTER

Newsletter Voice Manifesto.

How Supermind writes to its own audience. Read before drafting any issue.

PROGRAM

SUPERMIND TEAM

WHERE

OWNER · B. AMECHI

VERSION

V1.1 · SEPTEMBER 2026

WHAT THIS IS

The brand's thinking, published

SM-SOP-03_BrandVoiceBible covers how the brand sounds everywhere. This covers the one place where you write as Supermind, to the people who read us, which is a different act from writing to an affiliate or replying to a customer.

The newsletter is the brand's thinking, published. Everything else we make is marketing. This is the thing that earns the right to market.

Governed by the SUPERMIND World Bible, Edition 02. Where anything here disagrees with it, the World Bible wins.

THE PREMISE

The world has more information than wisdom

Attention is extracted faster than it is restored. Our reader is surrounded by stimulation and starved of clarity. Every issue either restores some of that or adds to the noise.

The bar is simple and high: a person should finish the issue more composed, more capable, or more curious than they started it. If an issue does none of those three, it does not go out.

THE READER

Who we are writing to

Somebody building something. She works, creates, runs something, or is about to. She takes her mornings seriously. She has read enough wellness writing to be tired of being talked down to and enough performance writing to be tired of being treated like a machine.

Black intellectual life is the cultural centre of this brand: study circles, bookstores, barbershops, kitchens, jazz rooms, coffeehouses, places where conversation became strategy. That lineage is where the newsletter sits, and it is a responsibility. Centre contemporary Black life. Credit people, places and movements when history is named. Never use Blackness as texture.

Everyone else is welcome inside that. Nobody is written out.

THE VOICE

Five qualities

QUALITY	WHAT IT MEANS HERE
Exact	Name the mechanism, the study, the amount, the person. Vagueness is the tell of somebody who did not read the source
Intelligent	Assume curiosity. Explain without lecturing. Never define a word the reader already knows
Cultural	Lived context, ritual, memory. The idea arrives through a real place and a real practice
Composed	Short sentences. Controlled rhythm. No urgency, no hype, no countdown timers
Evidence aware	Separate what is known, what is suggested, and what we believe. Say which is which

The approved line from the World Bible, to read when you are unsure: Built for the hours when clarity becomes action.

THE REGISTER, WRITTEN OUT

Most people reach for coffee at the wrong hour. Cortisol is already doing the work between six and eight; the cup lands on top of something that was handling itself, and the crash arrives around eleven wearing a disguise.

Move it ninety minutes later and the same cup does a different job.

That is the whole issue. Try it for a week and tell us what changed.

Specific. Short. Teaches one thing. Ends with something to do. No exclamation marks, no emoji, no greeting.

STRUCTURE

The six pillars

Every issue is one of these. One pillar per issue.

PILLAR	WHAT IT COVERS	FEELS LIKE
The Science	A mechanism, a study, a biological reality, explained properly	A smart friend who read the paper
The World	Culture, history, lineage, the places where thinking happens	A room you want to be in

PILLAR	WHAT IT COVERS	FEELS LIKE
The Founder's Desk	19Keys or Mariah, first person	A letter
The Product	Ingredient, sourcing, formulation, an honest look inside	A factory tour with nothing hidden
The Practice	One ritual the reader can do today	A thing you do
The Network	An affiliate's story. Who they are, what they built	Recognition, and recruitment by accident

The Network pillar does double work. It honours somebody in the program and shows every reader that becoming an affiliate is a thing real people do. It is the quietest recruiting mechanism we own.

THE SHAPE OF AN ISSUE

PART	LENGTH	JOB
Subject line	Under 45 characters	Earn the open honestly
Opening line	One sentence	Start mid-thought. No greeting
The idea	150–250 words	One governing idea, stated and supported
The turn	50–100 words	Why it matters to somebody building something
The practice	30–60 words	One thing to do today
The close	One or two lines	A reflection, or a question worth sitting with
The ask	One line	Soft. Product, the Ritual Finder, or nothing

600 to 900 words. Long enough to say something, short enough to finish standing up. An issue that only teaches is doing its job.

SUBJECT LINES

Under 45 characters. No clickbait, no false urgency.

- The flat claim. Cortisol does the first two hours.
- The reframe. Clarity is the luxury.
- The specific. 1,000mg, and why the number matters.
- The question. What are your sharpest four hours?

Never: all caps, emoji, exclamation marks, "Don't miss," "Last chance," or anything promising a secret.

GOVERNANCE

Claims

Science is a house discipline and a method. Every issue that touches the body follows this.

1. Begin with a clear question.
2. Prefer primary evidence and reproducible methods.
3. Separate observation, association, mechanism and causation.
4. State the population, sample, dose, timeframe and limits.
5. Change the claim when the evidence changes.
6. Never use a lab coat, a chart or an expert as a shortcut to trust.

Ancestral knowledge can guide the question. Evidence governs the public claim. Never write that the product cures, treats, prevents or heals a condition. Never mention medication. Never write "clinically proven" without the study attached and cited at the foot of the issue: Author or institution · Year · Title · Journal · link.

FORMATTING RULES

- No emojis. No capitals for emphasis. One exclamation mark only in genuine congratulations.
- Coffee is the morning, chocolate the afternoon, tea and cacao the evening. Keep the lanes straight.
- Supermind in prose. The wordmark is artwork and is never typed.
- @supermindlab on every social reference. AI-generated imagery carries #ai wherever it appears publicly.
- One idea per issue. Two ideas make two issues.

Words to retire: journey, elevate, game-changer, unlock, synergy, holistic wellness solution, superfood as an adjective, hustle, grind, vibes, obsessed, literally, just, dive in, let's talk about, in today's world. Just is the one that appears by accident. Delete it every time.

BEFORE IT SENDS

Seven checks

1. Is there one governing idea, or did two get in?
2. Does the first sentence start at the point?
3. Any claim that cures, treats, prevents or heals? Rewrite it.
4. Is every number, study and name checked against the source?
5. Is there one specific thing the reader can do today?
6. Is there a line somebody would screenshot?
7. Does this make intelligence feel desirable, human, grounded and enduring?

Question seven is the World Bible's own quality-control question and it separates a competent issue from one people forward.

Sources · SUPERMIND World Bible, Controlled Working Edition 02, 27 August 2026, pages 3, 9, 10, 18, 28, 60, 70.