

CONTENT · NEWSLETTER STRATEGY & BRAND VOICE GUIDE

What we send. How it sounds. Who writes it.

The newsletter is not shipping. One was drafted last week, never sent, still carrying last year's photographs. This document fixes that permanently: six content pillars, a defined voice built from three reference brands plus Keys, a production workflow that makes three sends a week genuinely achievable, and the AI setup that does the heavy lifting without producing slop.

OWNER

B. AMECHI · KEYS SUPPLIES VOICE AND TOPICS · PAM BUILDS
AND SCHEDULES

CADENCE

3× PER WEEK · BATCHED
MONTHLY

VERSION

V1.0 · SEPTEMBER
2026

PART 01

What the newsletter is actually for.

It has three jobs and they rank in this order: keep 163 subscribers subscribed, recruit affiliates, sell product. Most brand newsletters invert that and become a coupon feed nobody opens.

Keys set the rule on September 1: value first, never event recaps. "It ain't got to be, hey, we did an event, look at this event, because nobody's going to care. It's really trying to create value for the audience." Longevity, blue zones, meditation, science, education — the things a reader would open even if they had no intention of buying anything.

Then, at the bottom of every issue, the affiliate story. Who they are, how they started, what the extra income actually does for them. That slot is a recruiting engine disguised as a human-interest column, and it is the reason this document sits in the affiliate system rather than a marketing folder.

WHO WE ARE WRITING TO

A Black woman, roughly 25–45, who is building something. She works, creates, runs something or is about to. She reads. She takes her mornings seriously. She is tired of wellness that talks down to her, and she is looking for a ritual that is actually good rather than a miracle.

Write to her by default. Everything else — men, other age ranges — still lands, but the default reader is her.

THE TEST FOR EVERY ISSUE BEFORE IT GOES

Would she forward this to one friend? If the honest answer is no, it is a product announcement wearing a newsletter's clothes, and it should go back for another pass.

PART 02

The six pillars.

Every issue belongs to exactly one pillar. Three sends a week means each pillar comes around roughly every fortnight, which is enough variety that nobody gets bored and enough repetition that the brand becomes legible.

PILLAR	WHAT IT COVERS	EXAMPLE TOPICS	VOICE WEIGHT
01 • The Science	Ingredients, mechanisms, cognition, longevity. The depth that earns the price.	What lion's mane actually does • Why the 2pm crash happens • Blue zones and what they really have in common • Caffeine and L-theanine • Sleep architecture	Anima Mundi + David
02 • The World	Where we have been and what we saw. Travel, sourcing, culture, the places behind the product.	The Africa trip • How cacao is actually grown • Coffee's origin story, told properly • A city guide through the coffeehouse lens	Anima Mundi + Keys
03 • The Founder's Desk	Keys' voice, unfiltered. What he is thinking, building, reading, questioning.	Why he built a coffee company • What sovereignty means in business • What he is reading this month • The case for composure over hustle	Keys leads
04 • The Product	Drops, how to use it, recipes, the vessel system. Merchandising that reads as service.	Four ways to make the coffee • Which vessel for which morning • The collagen coffee, explained • Creatine, plainly	Chamberlain

05 • The Practice	Everyday wellness. Rituals, focus, movement, recovery, the ordinary discipline.	The first hour • Protecting your attention • Training and recovery • What to do about the afternoon • Winding down	Chamberlain + David
06 • The Network	Affiliate stories, member spotlights, community wins. The recruiting engine.	How [name] earns her subscription back • A member's morning • What our top affiliate does differently • Inside a gift box	Keys + warmth

THE THREE-A-WEEK ROTATION

	MONDAY	WEDNESDAY	FRIDAY
Week 1	The Science	The Practice	The Network
Week 2	The Founder's Desk	The Product	The World
Week 3	The Science	The Practice	The Network
Week 4	The World	The Product	The Founder's Desk

Keys' rule on cadence: batch a month in one session and drip them out. Whoever sends one schedules the next four. Weekly cadence decays into monthly the first week somebody is busy — three a week with a month in the bank does not.

The voice — built from four sources.

Supermind's newsletter voice is a deliberate blend. Three brands do something specific extremely well; Keys supplies the register that makes it ours rather than a copy.

40% ANIMA MUNDI Depth with soul. Botanical and scientific detail delivered with reverence, not clinical distance.	25% DAVID Structural rigor. Credibility through citation, comparison and plain numbers.	20% CHAMBERLAIN Warm competence. Practical, unpretentious, genuinely useful.	15% 19 KEYS The register. Sovereignty, frequency, building, ownership, ancestral intelligence.
---	---	--	--

REFERENCE	WHAT TO TAKE	REAL EXAMPLES OF THEIR WORK	WHAT NOT TO TAKE
Anima Mundi Herbals animamundiherbals.com	Group ingredients by the job they do , in plain-language section names. Use real citations under mystical framing. Own a piece of contested history once a quarter.	"Decolonizing Herbalism: Who Decided What Counts as Medicine?" · "REWILDING YOUR INNER Ecosystem" · "The Viral #WaterTok Hydration Drinks Barely Hydrate (But This Does)"	Astrology. The all-caps-first-words typographic tic. Their length — 2,500 words is too long for us.
David — The Column davidprotein.com/blogs/the-column	The comparison table where our product is one honest row . Coining a metric we can own. A "Key Takeaways" block up top. One wry human line at the end.	"How Much Protein Do You Really Need?" · "Calories From Protein: Why Protein Density Matters" · "Why Consistency Is the Most Underrated Variable in Nutrition"	The flat, anecdote-free openings. Their length. The fully clinical register — we are warmer than this.
Chamberlain Coffee chamberlaincoffee.com/blogs/inspiration	Renaming the FAQ to "Questions People Actually Ask." A "Best for:" line closing each option. A "before you start" section naming the two things that ruin the result.	"Four Matcha Smoothies, One for Every Mood" · "Cold Brew That Actually Earns a Spot in Your Fridge" · "The Do's and Don'ts of Matcha"	The near-duplicate SEO filler tier. Overuse of "actually" — it's a good word once per piece, not four times.
19 Keys — the 15%	Vocabulary and frames: sovereignty, ownership, frequency, building, the highest level, ancestral intelligence, composure as power. One or two per issue, placed where they land.	His own posts and talks are the reference. Pull phrasing from the World Bible and his recorded sessions.	Don't overdo it. 15% means it seasons the piece; at 50% it becomes a different brand's newsletter.

Rules of the voice.

ALWAYS

- Lead with something true and specific. A number, an observation, a moment. Not "In today's fast-paced world."
- Short paragraphs. One to three sentences. White space is part of the design.
- Speak to "you." Singular. One reader, not a list.
- Cite the science when you invoke it. A link is worth more than an adjective.
- Name real things. The 8 oz coffee, the oxblood vessel, Ethiopia, 6am. Concrete beats abstract every time.
- Close with one clear next thing — a product, a challenge, an affiliate signup, a reply.
- Sound like a person who knows something, talking to a person they respect.

NEVER

- Marketing buzzwords. Game-changing, revolutionary, unlock, elevate, curated, journey, wellness solution.
- "Imagine if you..." Don't ask the reader to picture a scenario. Tell them what is real.
- Event recaps as the main body. A photo from the hike belongs in a Practice issue about walking, not as its own newsletter.
- Treatment claims. Same rules as the affiliates: supports, part of, here's what the research says. Never cures, treats, prevents.
- Last year's photographs. Fixed by shipping the new photography.
- More than one call to action. One issue, one ask.
- Exclamation marks. Quiet authority does not shout.

THE STRUCTURAL TEMPLATE — EVERY ISSUE

BLOCK	LENGTH	WHAT IT DOES
Subject line	4–8 words	Specific and concrete. Write five, pick one. Never clickbait — she'll punish it.
Preview text	6–12 words	Extends the subject rather than repeating it.
The standard open	1 line	A consistent greeting so the issue is recognisable in three words. Pick one and never change it.
The hook	2–3 sentences	The true specific thing. Creates the slippery slope into the body.
The body	350–500 words	One idea, developed. Sub-headings if it needs them. This is the value.
The practical turn	50–100 words	What to actually do with what they just read. Chamberlain's job.
Product or brand note	2–4 sentences	Connected to the body, not bolted on.
The Network slot	80–120 words	An affiliate story, every issue. Who they are, how they started, what it does for them, and a link to join.
Sign-off	1–2 lines	Consistent. One line of Keys' register lands well here.

Total 550–750 words. Long enough to be worth opening, short enough to finish on a phone before the coffee goes cold.

The production workflow — how three a week actually happens.

Nobody is writing three original newsletters a week from a blank page. The workflow is: Keys talks, AI structures, a human edits, Pam schedules four ahead. Every step below exists to protect the quality while removing the friction that has kept this from shipping at all.

THE MONTHLY BATCH SESSION — 90 MINUTES, ONCE

- 01 Keys records raw voice notes — twelve topics, three to five minutes each, completely unstructured. Talking the way he would on a call, not writing. This is the "something human" the whole process is built on; skip it and the output is slop.
- 02 Amechi assigns each topic to a pillar and drops the transcripts into the Claude project.
- 03 Claude drafts all twelve against the project instructions in Part 06.
- 04 A human edits every one. Non-negotiable. Cut the third adjective, put a real number in, make sure the Keys register is present and not overdone.
- 05 Pam builds them in Shopify Email on the Edition 02 template and schedules the month.
- 06 The Network slot is written last, per issue, because the affiliate story is fresh each time. Celina supplies one a week from her Thursday follow-ups.

THE CLAUDE PROJECT — SET THIS UP ONCE

Create a project called "Supermind Newsletter." Upload four knowledge files and paste the instructions from Part 06. Every future issue starts from a voice note in that project.

FILE TO UPLOAD	WHAT'S IN IT
1 • Writing samples	The most important file. Three to five pieces that sound right — Keys' best posts, the strongest issues once we have them, and two or three excerpts from the reference brands marked as reference not as ours.
2 • Audience	The reader description from Part 01, plus what we know about the 163 subscribers and what they ask for.
3 • Products & offers	Every SKU, price, what it is, who it's for, the affiliate offer and its tier structure. This is what makes the closing ask specific instead of generic.
4 • Brand guide	World Bible Edition 02 plus this document — colors, casting, claims language, the pillars, the voice blend.

More knowledge is better than less. Add customer testimonials, competitor issues we admire, and the claims word bank from the Handbook.

The project instructions — paste this in.

Overview. Transform raw voice notes or rough topic notes into a Supermind newsletter of 550–750 words that a Black woman aged 25–45 who is building something would forward to a friend.

Before writing, always analyse the knowledge files: the writing samples for voice and cadence; the audience file for what resonates; the products file for the specific closing ask; the brand guide for claims language and the pillar definition.

Voice. Blend four sources: 40% Anima Mundi (depth with reverence, ingredients grouped by what they do, real citations), 25% David (structural rigor, an honest comparison, plain numbers, one wry closing line), 20% Chamberlain Coffee (warm competence, practical, "Best for:" framing, a renamed FAQ), and 15% 19 Keys (sovereignty, ownership, frequency, building, composure as power — season with it, do not saturate).

Structure. Standard open line · hook of 2–3 sentences built on something true and specific · body of 350–500 words on ONE idea · a practical turn saying what to do with it · a product or brand note connected to the body · the Network slot with an affiliate story · consistent sign-off.

Rules. Paragraphs of 1–3 sentences. Speak to "you," singular. Name concrete things — the 8 oz coffee, the oxblood vessel, Ethiopia, 6am. Cite the science when invoked. One call to action only. No buzzwords (game-changing, revolutionary, unlock, elevate, curated, journey). Never ask the reader to imagine a scenario. No exclamation marks. Never claim the product cures, treats, prevents or fixes any condition — use "supports," "part of," "here's what the research says."

Always deliver: the newsletter, five subject-line options (4–8 words, concrete), five preview-text options, and a one-line note on which pillar it belongs to.

Quality check before finishing: Is there one specific true thing in the first three sentences? Is it one idea, not three? Is there a real number or named thing? Would she forward it? Is there exactly one ask? Is the Keys register present but under 20%? Are all claims safe?

HEADLINE FORMULAS THAT WORK FOR US

FORMULA	SUPERMIND EXAMPLE
Question + what it actually means	"Is Lion's Mane Real? What the Research Actually Shows"
Contrarian correction	"Your 2pm Crash Isn't About Caffeine"
Number + one for every occasion	"Four Ways to Make It, One for Every Kind of Morning"
The thing behind the thing	"What We Found in Ethiopia"
Plain and specific	"How She Earns Her Subscription Back"
Concept + colon + why it matters	"Composure: Why the Calm One Wins"

The first month, written out.

#	PILLAR	WORKING TITLE	THE ASK AT THE END
1	The Founder's Desk	Why I Built a Coffee Company	Subscribe / shop the 8 oz
2	The Science	Your 2pm Crash Isn't About Caffeine	Shop the coffee
3	The Network	How She Earns Her Subscription Back	Become an affiliate
4	The Practice	The First Hour	The First Hour challenge
5	The Product	Four Ways to Make It	Shop / recipe challenge
6	The World	What We Found in Ethiopia	Subscribe
7	The Science	Is Lion's Mane Real? What the Research Shows	Shop
8	The Practice	Protecting Your Attention	Reply with your ritual
9	The Network	Inside a Gift Box	Become an affiliate
10	The Founder's Desk	What I'm Reading This Month	Subscribe
11	The Product	Which Vessel for Which Morning	Shop vessels
12	The World	How Cacao Actually Grows	Shop chocolate

MEASUREMENT

METRIC	TARGET BY DEC 1
Sends per week	3, consistently
Open rate	35%+ (small engaged list)
Click rate	4%+
List size	163 → 600
Affiliates recruited from the Network slot	25+
Unsubscribe rate	Under 0.5% per send
Issues always queued ahead	4 minimum

SOURCES

Newsletter workflow methodology adapted from Moodboard / Ryan Carr, "Use Claude to write great newsletters (fast)," July 2025 (supplied by B. Amechi) · Voice references analysed September 2026: Anima Mundi Herbals blog (animamundiherbals.com/blogs/our-blog), David Protein "The Column" (davidprotein.com/blogs/the-

WHAT HAS TO BE TRUE BEFORE ISSUE ONE

- ☐ Edition 02 template built in Shopify Email — new colors, new wordmark, new photography
 - ☐ New product and lifestyle photography shot (Amechi)
 - ☐ Claude project created with all four knowledge files
 - ☐ Keys' first voice-note batch recorded
 - ☐ The standard open line and sign-off chosen and locked
 - ☐ The first affiliate story captured for the Network slot
 - ☐ Send times set: Monday, Wednesday, Friday mornings
- Owner map: Keys supplies topics, voice notes and the Founder's Desk. Amechi owns pillars, editing and photography. Pam builds, schedules and reports. Celina supplies one affiliate story a week.

