Hijack Campaigns.

Going after audiences that already buy functional coffee, honestly, using the one argument most of the category cannot answer.

THE ARGUMENT

The dose is printed

Most of this category hides behind a proprietary blend. We print Lion's Mane at 1,000mg of fruiting body per serving on the bag. Every campaign here rests on that single fact, stated plainly, with no competitor named.

Never name a competitor, never disparage a brand, never claim another product is harmful. Compare our label to the idea of a hidden blend, rather than to a named company. This keeps the argument strong and the legal exposure at zero.

WHERE

Audiences worth the effort

AUDIENCE	WHERE THEY ARE	THE WAY IN
Mushroom coffee buyers	Comments on category content	The label read
Nootropic and focus buyers	Productivity and deep-work content	The four-hour block
Morning-routine viewers	Routine and ritual content	The unhurried morning
Coffee purists	Coffee content	The taste test
Wellness sceptics	Anti-hype wellness content	Printed doses and plain language

FORMATS

What to run

- 1. The label read. Fifteen seconds. The bag, the panel, the number, one sentence.
- 2. The blind taste test. Ours against unnamed alternatives, honestly, whichever way it goes.
- 3. The price maths. Coffee-shop spend against a cup at home, and what the difference buys.
- 4. The question post. Ask people what their mushroom coffee actually contains and reply to every comment with a straight answer.

COLD TRIAL

Turning trial into a customer

The sampling offer runs on approval from Mariah, since it touches inventory. When it runs: a sample or a first-order discount, a follow-up on day three asking what they noticed, and an invitation to the Creator Network on day ten for anyone who posts about it unprompted.

MEASURE

What counts

Comments answered · saves and shares on label-read content · new codes issued from campaign traffic · first-order conversion from sampled contacts. Report at the L10. A campaign that produced attention and no codes gets changed or stopped.
